A Note to Contributors

Each issue is planned according to the results of conversations held with the faculty, administration, and students during our three annual visits to the various colleges and universities. For the most part, the editors commission articles based on the questions which emerge; but we welcome unsolicited articles as well. Please understand that, since the editors meet only three times a year, it may take several months before the issue takes shape. Please send the article both as a Microsoft Word attachment to raymondschroth@aol.com and in hard copy to the editor at Saint Peter's College. We also welcome occasional photographs, preferably journalistic action shots — not posed groups — fully captioned, which can serve as a brief essay in themselves. Preferable format: a CD containing digital images scanned at not less than 300 dpi. Or the traditional print.

Possible topics for future issues: How should Jesuit education respond to what has been described as the "crisis in the Church"? What are the values in the "new" teaching methods — distance learning, technology in the classroom, etc.? Also, residential learning communities, health care and healing, spirituality.
